TOWN COUNCIL MEETING

Council Chamber,
May 3rd, 1920

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor J. E. Robinson presiding.

Present—Councillors Boyes, MacGregor, Roblin, Mugg, Lowry, and Paul.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

Coun. Boyes gave to the council a lucid account of the proceedings of a meeting of the Board of Commerce held in Belleville recently, which meeting he attended as a delegate from the town council. The question under discussion was the placing of a steamer upon the Bay of Quinte. Two schemes were proposed. One that a small steamer be purchased to ply upon the bay calling at all ports. The other was to procure a larger steamer and have the boat routed from bay ports to Quebec. The opinion of the meeting was that funds from private sources should be subscribed for the venture. No definite action resulted from the meeting.

Coun. Boyes also gave a report of his visit to Peterboro on matters pertaining to the Hydro-Electric system. The meeting was called at the suggestion of Peterboro citizens, and the scheme advanced was that all the municipalities in Central Ontario, using the Hydro current, combine and purchase the system and run it themselves. Those favorable to the scheme advanced the argument that the users of Hydro current were paying for the bonds, which had been issued for payment of construction of the system, and which had been guaranteed by the Province of Ontario, and in forty years the bonds would be redeemed, and the users who were virtually paying the bonds would have nothing, whereby if they purchased the system at the end of the forty years they would own it. There had been no facts or figures presented to the meeting as to what it would cost to buy the Central Ontario system, and several of the delegates were impressed with the fact that the question had not been carefully examined from all points of view. In presenting his report Coun. Boyes expressed his opinion as not being in favor of the scheme, as he thought that as the Hydro system had been built by the people, and for the people, the current should have the same power. Under the scheme proposed it appeared to him as though the smaller municipalities would be dominated by the larger ones, on account of being the larger consumers, and the difference in the charge per horse power would forever exclude the possibility of the smaller municipalities ever securing any new industries. All the small municipalities were opposed to the scheme, and were of the opinion that the question should be left in abeyance until the Ontario Government could go into the matter most thoroughly.

On motion the question of the Hydro-Electric movement was referred to the Finance Committee with instructions to keep in touch with what is going on and, if considered necessary, to consult with the surrounding municipalities and endeavor to have representatives go before the Ontario Government and voice their objections against the passing of proposed legislation in this matter at the present session.

Mr. Geo. Hartman was before the council asking for the removal of the water spout in front of Hartman & Card's place of business on East Street.

Referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

The Police and Market Committee reported on the application of Night Constable Board for an increase in salary. The Committee recommended an increase of $150.00 per year, dating from January 1st.

Report adopted.

On motion of Councillors Paul and Ming tenders for the sale of the market tolls and both weigh scales will be asked for by advertising in the local press, said tenders to be in the hands of the Clerk by May 17th.

Mr. Geo. T. Walters has purchased Mr. O. R. Laidley's property on Isabella street, and he was before the council in reference to having a sewer constructed.

Referred to Streets Committee.

The Orange Association, who are handling the 12th of July celebration in Napanee this year, asked for the privilege of selling booths on the streets on that date.

Request granted on the conditions that all booths be placed subject to the approval of the Streets Committee.

On motion the Mayor was authorized to issue a proclamation asking the citizens to observe the statutory holidays of May 24th and June 3rd, as public holidays.

Ontario's Minerals.

A drop of $25,000,000 in Ontario's metallic mineral production during 1919 is the feature of a preliminary report for the year issued by the Bureau of Mines. The value of metals produced during the twelve months amounted to $41,510,000, compared with $66,178,059 for the preceding twelve months. A scrutiny of the details of the statement, however, shows that the reduction is accounted for almost entirely by the small production of silver, nickle and copper matte, and the reduction in the market value of the latter metals. The falling off in the output of silver was compensated for to some extent by the high prices, but even at that, the value of the mines' output was, roughly, $4,500,000 below that of 1918.

Metallic nickel was produced to a much greater extent and provided an increase of nearly two million dollars in value.

While silver production in Ontario continues to decrease, even with the treating of low-grade ores made possible by high prices, the gold mining industry continues to grow. The 1919 output of 505,962 ounces, worth $10,461,688, was the largest to date. Ontario is rapidly becoming a great gold producing province, the output last year being greater than that of any other province or any state of the American Union, with the exception of California.

An Airplane on the Nile.

A despatch from Cairo says that the Times airplane landed 425 miles up river at Assuan and no doubt it has "proceeded" by this time. But what a change from Antony's days, what a very great change from barges and roses and gleaming helmets and blank verse! No Cleopatra's barge with burnished throne and poop of beaten gold. No silver oars or cupids like cooks. Instead a good strong airplane that skims along in prosaic romance, whirring, chugging, spreading, gasoline liberally and caring not a broken cobdius for Antony or any other of the memories along Nile's banks as it roared onward. If Antony and Cleopatra had an airplane it would not be quickly have been a hydroplane made of solid gold, riveted with emeralds and diamonds, its wings of material brought from shaken Samarkand, its blades of quintessential cedar, everything that the most expensive and panderous Roman fancy could imagine and install with a monarchial self-satisfaction, while the Greek agent of a rival but lighter machine would have looked at Antony's flight in it with elegant disapproval. But when Antony made his first landing the centuries would have met as he kicked the desert sand out of his buskins and tried to remember that he was a Roman and not extremely glad there was none there to see his jolting save a crow or two and the bright sun.

HOME RULE COMES UP

British House of Commons Now Tackles Problem.

Nationalists Are Angry and Will Not Take Part In Discussion Because They Claim That "Treaty of 1914" Was Sacred—They Object to Bill Proposed by Premier Lloyd George.

LONDON, May 4.—The chief interest in Parliament this week is attracted in the Home Rule debate, which opens on Wednesday. A host of amendments await discussion, but the measure rule will be applied vigorously.

Nationalist members have decided to take no part in the debate. In a statement issued Sunday they say:

"The only genuine provision in the Government proposals is the repeal of the Home Rule Act of 1914. That treaty of 1914 is as sacred as the Treaty of Limerick, and its violation is perfidious and treacherous, and a crime against the good faith between nations."

The land agitation in west Ireland is continuing to make rapid headway, according to a despatch to the London Times, and has spread to County Clare. Cattle-driving and other forms of intimidation are said to be of almost daily occurrence. Grazing lands are stripped of their stock, fences and gates are broken, trees destroyed, and houses fired into by armed parties. Large and small holders alike are the victims. The despatch says it is openly boasted that the "coming fight in the test for land will be one of the biggest things the country has seen for some time."

It is pointed out that the country is full of young men who are unable to emigrate during the war, and that their activities naturally are directed with the few acres possessed by their parents, says the Times.

The police barracks at Gorton, County Tyrone, was burned Sunday by forty armed men, who held up the village and prevented interference. The police buildings at Plum Bridge also were burned.

Thirty-five more hunger-strikers were removed from the Belfast Jail to a hospital Sunday, making 60 who have been released in the past two days. There are now no hunger-strikers in the prison.

George Murnaghan, a solicitor of Omagh, whose father represented the Mid-Tyrone district in Parliament for fifteen years, was arrested by the military and taken to Belfast. He was election agent for Arthur Griffith, founder of the Sinn Fein organization, in Northeast Tyrone at the general elections. Dr. Stuart, Health Officer at Becurbeit, County Cavan, also has been arrested.

In Londonderry Saturday night Constable Peter Henley was shot through the leg while on his beat. A party of police which hastened to the scene of the shooting also was fired on. One of the policemen was struck by a spent bullet, but was not hurt. The police returned the fire of the attacking party, all the members of which escaped.

Fourteen Sinn Fein prisoners in the jail in Cork have started on a hunger-strike.

The custodians of public buildings in Dublin which have documents or arms are stored are advised by the police that, in view of possible Sinn Fein raids, strong rooms should be provided for them and fitted with burglar alarms, with all windows barred or steel-shuttered, and guarded at night by watchmen.

NO ROYAL TRIP.

Prince of Wales Refuses Special Privileges.

AUCKLAND, N.Z., May 4. — The Prince of Wales resumed his tour of New Zealand by train today, the strike of the railway men having been ended. In the afternoon the prince reached Tauranuniu, having been welcomed everywhere with enthusiasm.

An interesting incident connected with the visit to Auckland was that the settlement of the walkout the prince was told there would be no difficulty in finding men to run the royal train.

"Will they run trains for the people?" the prince inquired.

"If the people will not," a railroad official replied.

"That being so," the prince responded, "they cannot run trains for me. I shall ride on the pony."

The tour of the prince through northern New Zealand had been abandoned owing to the obstinacy of the locomotive engineers and other striking railroaders, and the prince had arranged to leave Auckland on board the Hero for Wellington. The calling off of the strike, however, induced the prince to alter his program.

FEW MAY DAY STRIKES

No Signs of the Much-Heralded "Revolution."

"Red" Elements In United States, British Empire and France Hoped to Cause Chaos In Industries, But There Were Only a Small Number of Clashes and All Troubles Were Local.

NEW YORK, May 4.—The "Reds" concerned in the much heralded May Day plot appear to have prevented up to Saturday, not so much as the explosion of a fire-cracker seems to have been heard in most cities in the United States.

The plans of radical leaders for country-wide May Day demonstrations, involving strikes and the destruction of life and property, fell flat, Department of Justice officials claimed, because the authorities were forewarned and issued timely notice to the public.

Reports received here show that a number of strikes were instituted over the week-end, but in nearly every case, it is declared these were local in nature, and due to the regular May Day expiration of wage contracts.

In Chicago, where extra precautions were taken to prevent trouble, the day passed off quietly. A strike of cooks and waiters in various hotels, and the general recession incidents to moving day, when scores of tenants refused to vacate their apartments, overshadowed May Day disturbances. Although more than 1,000 arrests were made, these, the police say, had nothing to do with "Red" activities.

Two-thirds of Kansas miners were reported idle. In various places hand-bills purporting to bear the authorization of the Communist Party of America were distributed. In Omaha, 10,000 people marched in a patriotic parade, and in Kansas City a flag was made the occasion for patriotic demonstrations.

Britain Is Quiet.

LONDON, May 4.—Labor's May Day celebration in Britain passed off in a manner very satisfactory to the general community. Although labor leaders estimate that 1,000,000 made holiday, work seemed to go on as usual in most industries throughout the morning, and it was only because of the general Saturday half-holiday that the demonstrations arranged at various centres proved successful.

The only serious strike which some of the railway extremists had tried to engineer proved a complete failure, the railway workers realising that this unauthorized interruption would merely antagonize the rest of the community, without improving their chances of obtaining a favorable decision on the issue which is to decide on their wage claims next week.

Both in London and in the other cities May Day processions were orderly. The London parade, which was late in starting because most of the men and women took part in it were at work during the morning, was the longest on record, and also the most beflagged ever seen here.

The police were out in great numbers, but there was no disturbance. The procession wound up in Hyde Park, where more than seventy speeches were made. While the tone of many of them was decidedly "Red," the 400 dancing floors as much attention as the songs sung by children of the Socialist Sunday School choir.

Three Killed In Paris.

PARIS, May 4.—Official figures issued give the casualties resulting from the disorders Saturday as three killed and 900 wounded, of whom six remain in hospital, and 400 of them in a dangerous condition. The arrests aggregated 103.

The fatalities among those arrested are to be deported.

Alexandre Blanc, Extreme Socialist Deputy, who was injured in Saturday's rioting, will not, it is said, be prosecuted on a charge of abuse of the police. Parliamentary immunity, it is said, will not apply to his case, which, it is asserted, is that of a flagrant offence. M. Blanc was one of the Deputies who met the Germans in Switzerland recently at the time of an international Socialist conference.

The strike of railroad men for nationalization of the railways, which is to be put into effect by two of them in sections and clockmen, has resulted thus far, in hindering traffic only on four of the big systems—the Eastern, Northern, Orleans and Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean. Temporarily, however, the state line, which runs to Havre, is tied up.

"The strike is a complete failure," said Yves Letrocquer, the Minister of Public Works. Service on all lines were curtailed last night. The Parisian forces were operating about 50 per cent., except the Lazarre state system, which cancelled all trains from the outset in the Government's determination to fight the strike for nationalization, has been voiced by M. Letrocquer and Alexandre Millerand. M. Millerand said the Government was prepared to do its duty in the maintenance of order to protect the men who remain at work.

POLES ARE ADVANCING.

Have Captured City of Kiev From the Bolsheviki.

WARSAW, May 4.—Polish forces occupied Kiev Sunday, according to extra editions of the newspapers here. Gen. Pilsudski, President of the Polish State, led the troops into the city, the newspapers say.

It had previously been reported that Winnica and Zhmerinka, approximately 52 miles southwest of Kiev, had been retaken by the Poles and Ukrainians after three days of fighting. The advance said the fighting had been pushed across the Bug river, while they were backed up against the Dneiper river, and were preparing to carry Pilsudski's troops. They were fighting their way from three directions. Chinese mercenaries were being used by the Bolsheviki.

An official statement issued by the Soviet Government at Moscow on Sunday says:

"On the Kiev region our troops are fiercely engaged west of the River Irpen and at Fastoff (30 miles southwest of Kiev). Our pontilla on the River Pripety has captured an enemy steamer. In the Podolsk region there is no change. In the Reshitsa district (Government of Vitebsk), north of Rezenovskaia station, the enemy drove back our troops, but our former position was restored by a counter-attack.

"On the Black Sea coast our troops captured Stotchy after severe fighting in dense forests. We captured two armored trains and large military booty."

U.S. VERY NERVOUS.

Destroyers Sent to Guard Interests In Mexico.

WASHINGTON, May 4. — American destroyers have been ordered to Vera Cruz and Tampico to protect Americans there. The Navy Department acted on the request of the State Department, where it was explained that the warships would take aboard Americans who may desire to leave in event that should become necessary. It was said that the vessels would not intervene in Mexican affairs and that their despatch was a precautionary measure. Only the cruiser Sacramento is now on the east coast of Mexico.

No reports of any disturbances in either Vera Cruz or Tampico have been received by the State Department, but revolutionary outbreaks have occurred near both ports.

Advices to the Government Monday said the line between Mexico City and Vera Cruz had been cut, but they did not indicate the extent of damage. The line runs through the northern part of the state of Tlaxcala, the governor and military commander of which were reported last week to have joined the Sonora revolution.

RELIEF TRAIN CAPTURED.

Canadian Officers Reported to Have Been Murdered.

VLADIVOSTOK, May 4.—An indirect report has been received by Capt. J. S. Atkinson, head of the Canadian Red Cross, that a relief train sent into the interior was captured, the personnel being imprisoned and shot. No direct word from the train has been received since it passed Harbin a few days after it started.

Though it is possible that the supplies may have been commandeered, it is unbelievable that any of the officers accompanying them were harmed. The train consisted of sixteen cars of medical and hospital supplies and refugee clothing, and was in charge of Capt. Douglas D. Young, of Kingston, Ont. He was accompanied by Capt. Peacock, representing the British Medical Mission; Dr. O'Driscoll, of Dublin; and Sergt. Brown, of Canada. The destination of the train was Irkutsk, where there is critical need of medicine and clothing.

NITTI MAY RESIGN.

Cabinet Crisis Is Looked For In Italy.

ROME, May 4.—A new Cabinet crisis, involving Premier Nitti, is expected here. The crisis, it is said, will come from the action of the national council of the Catholic party, which has voted against Nitti because of dissatisfaction over his internal and foreign policies. The council accuses Nitti of partiality toward the Socialists, permitting ostracism of the Catholic labor unions and of passivity toward provokers of disorder. The Premier also was blamed for his failure to settle the Adriatic controversy during the recent San Remo conference.

In political circles it is rumored Nitti already had selected Signor Bonomi, independent member and Minister of War in the present Cabinet, as his successor.

Ring Protects Wearers.

The "luck" ring of Mr. Wm. R. Switzer, of Toronto, has returned to its owner for the third time. The ring is of gold, surmounted by a Masonic emblem, but, according to its owner, for the third time.

The ring saw its service during the American campaign in the Philippines. Mr. Switzer presented the ring to a friend leaving for active service, with the request that he return it if he should lose it. Some time, the friend and ring returned. Later, Mr. Switzer presented the ring to another friend, who was sailing to South America with the Canadian forces. Again the talisman protected its wearer; and at the close of the campaign the friend returned the ring to its owner. Pte. Sydney Sawley, of Ada, Ont., was the next to wear the ring, during his four years overseas, and on his return to Toronto he restored the ring to Mr. Switzer several weeks ago.

A Glimpse at the Spirit That Made Final Victory Possible for the Allies

UNDER the title, "The Spirit That Never Knew Defeat," the Nineteenth Century Magazine publishes a most interesting article. Its basis is the two volumes of Sir Douglas Haig's Despatches, which cover the war period, December, 1915, to April, 1919. There are many things in these despatches to give satisfaction to British readers, but perhaps none that will do more to establish Sir Douglas Haig's true greatness than the fact set out in the introduction by Marshal Foch as follows: "Was it not the insight of an experienced and enlightened commander which led him (Sir Douglas Haig) to intervene as he did with his own Government on the 24th of March, 1918, and with the Allied Governments assembled in Doullens on the 26th, to the end that the French and British armies might at once be placed under single command, even though his personal position should thereby suffer?" To appreciate this act of wonderful magnanimity one needs to remember that, as the despatches show, the 1917 campaign went astray, apparently through French influence, when Nivelle succeeded Joffre.

One can easily suppose that had Haig's plan for 1917 gone forward, the Germans would have been at least driven back to the Meuse, or even out of France and Belgium in the fall of that year. This supposition is not unreasonable and Ludendorff's remarks on the final stages of the 1917 campaign are interesting. He writes: "The fifth act of the Great Advance in Flanders, opened on the 22nd of October (1917). The horror of the shell-hole area of Verdun was surpassed. It was no longer life at all, it was unspeakable suffering. It must be admitted that certain units (German) no longer triumphed over the demoralizing effects of the defensive battle as they had done formerly. He dented it (the line) in many places, and it seemed as if he must knock it down. But it held, although a faint tremor ran through the foundation. We knew that the enemy suffered heavily, we also knew that he was amazingly strong, and, what was equally important, had an extraordinary stubborn will. Lloyd George wanted victory. He held England in the hollow of his hand. Only one thing we did not know: how long the battle would continue. The enemy must tire some time."

This admission by Ludendorff is of especial interest to Canadians, because the culmination of this attack was the capture of Passchendaele by the Canadian Corps. Haig's plan would have let loose the attack early in the year, and if it had proved as successful then as it did later in less favorable circumstances, it would have gone much further and very likely utterly broken the German morale, if not the enemy's power of resistance. As Doullens, therefore, he could have criticized French strategy, but he did not do so. He realized the need of united command. He was big enough and good enough to sink personal ambitions in the interest of united and undiminished effort. We may venture to predict that when the records of the failures and successes of the generals, field marshals and others who had important positions in connection with the Great War, have been analysed, it will be found that no one did more to wear down the enemy, destroy his morale and bring about his utter defeat than the commander-in-chief of the British forces in France and Belgium.

Sir Douglas in his despatches explains the plans to meet the March, 1918, German offensive in which the fifth army was so terribly mauled. The necessity of maintaining the northern end of our line, which ran dangerously close to the sea and protected the channel ports, is set out. Extracts from Ludendorff's book showing that the Germans appreciated the vital nature of this northern section are quoted. Haig's duties became very onerous. The channel ports had to be protected, a breach of the line from Arras to the north could not be permitted, hence reinforcements must be maintained in that section, while at the other end of the line, the British were called upon to take over a section from the French, and it appears that that section was not in good condition for defence.

Despite German initial successes, which drew from the British commander-in-chief his thrilling "backs to the wall" message, Ludendorff confesses that on March 25 he had to change his plans. "By April 5," he says, "it was an established fact that the enemy's resistance was beyond our strength. G.H.Q. had to take the extremely difficult decision to abandon the attack on Amiens." To Canadian readers the despatches covering the British offensive east of Amiens on August 8 and following days are of great interest. The object of this attack was to drive Amiens from further danger, and if successful, "to strike directly at the vital lateral communications running through Mauberge to Hirson Mezieres by which alone the German forces on the Champagne front could be supplied and maintained." It was here that the Canadian Corps, moved secretly down from near Arras for the purpose, formed the spear head of the attack that started the Germans back to ultimate and crushing defeat. August 8, 1918, is called by Ludendorff "the black day of the German army in the history of the war." August 8, 1918, was one of the brightest, if not the brightest day in the annals of the Canadian Corps. It was the beginning of the 100 days. Sir Douglas Haig's despatch says of this period: "The sweeping operations which success opened a clear field for the measures of exploitation determined upon to meet such an event."

Hun Agent Coming.

Alvo von Alvensleben, German financial baron of the Pacific Northwest before the war, and interned at Fort Douglas, Salt Lake City, since May, 1917, was granted a conditional parole on March 6th, and it is expected he will journey to Vancouver soon to gather together what remains of the fortune he had invested in mines and timber lands in that region.

During the war Von Alvensleben is declared to have been an active agent against Canada. He was a former lieutenant in the German army, which he travelled from the United States because of a dispute with a superior officer. Claims that he is a cousin of the Emperor Kaiser have been proved, but it is believed much of the money he invested in the Northwest was furnished by William of Hohenzollern.

Parole conditions did not stipulate that Von Alvensleben return to Germany.

History Repeats Itself, Recalling Great Speech Delivered by Gladstone

IN few things is the present world controversy concerning Turkey more remarkable than in the way history is repeating itself. Four years or so ago, the great anti-Turkish movement which swept over Great Britain, occasioned by the nameless outrages of the Turk upon the Bulgarians and other Christian peoples in the Balkans, was led by Gladstone. In the early autumn of 1876 he suddenly emerged from the retirement into which he had recently withdrawn, and with the publication of his famous pamphlet on the Bulgarian atrocities, embarked on a campaign against the pro-Turkish policy of the Government which ended, four years later, in the overthrow of Lord Beaconsfield, and Gladstone's return to power. This extraordinary effort was marked by three tremendous battles, the great denunciation through the pamphlet, a memorable speech in the House of Commons in the early days of the Russo-Turkish War, and the Midlothian campaign. In many ways, the speech was the most remarkable of the three. "I shall never forget," declared Mr. Balfour, many years afterwards, the impression that that speech left on my mind. As a mere feat of physical endurance it was almost unsurpassed; as a feat of parliamentary courage, parliamentary skill, parliamentary eloquence, I believe it will always be unequalled."

The occasion of its delivery was one of peculiar tension. A conference of the powers, which had met at Constantinople in the previous December, in an effort to settle the Turkish question, had broken down. A subsequent effort in the following March had likewise failed, and Russia had declared war on Turkey. Mr. Gladstone was all for immediate action. His colleagues in the Opposition were all for delay. Mr. Gladstone was in a peculiar position. Two years before he had vacated his place as leader of the Liberal party, Indeed, he did not regard himself as being, even technically, amongst the leaders of the party. He tried, therefore, at first, to induce the official leaders to act in the matter, but, on their continued refusal, decided that considerations of humanity overrode all mere party considerations, and determined to introduce a motion in the House, which, if it had been accepted, would have completely reversed the country's Near Eastern policy. This Mr. Gladstone wrote in his diary, under date of April 27, 1877, "I took my decision, a severe one, in face of my not having a single approver in the upper circle. But had I in the first days of September asked the same body whether I ought to write my pamphlet, I believe the unanimous answer would have been, No."

A few days later, Lord Granville and Lord Wolverton came round to see him, and he explained to them his view to endeavor to prevent any kind of breach in the party, but when Gladstone faced the House on his motions, on April 7, it was in the presence of tremendously hostile ministerial forces and a sullen and silent Opposition. To quote from his diary again: "For over two hours I was assailed from every quarter, except the Opposition bench, which was virtually silent. At last I rose on the main question, nearly in despair as to the result, but resolved at least not to fall through want of effort. I spoke two and one-half hours. House gradually came round and at last was more than good. It was over at 9.30."

Thus simply does Mr. Gladstone record the matter, but many who heard him on that occasion must have agreed with Mr. Balfour that they had listened to an effort which, in many respects, would "always be unequalled." The speech, however, is the thing. Take this one passage in what Lord Morley calls the "noble peroration": "You talk to me of the established tradition and policy in regard to Turkey. I appeal to an established tradition older, wider, nobler than Turkish tradition not which disregards British interests, but which teaches you to seek the promotion of these interests in obeying the dictates of honor and justice. And, sir, what is be the end of this? Are we to dress up the fantastic idea that some people entertain of this policy and that policy in the garb of British interests, and then, with a new and base idolatry, fall down and worship our own? Or take this appeal, made after describing the enormities of the Turk as Gladstone alone could describe them: "Why, sir, the removal of that woe and shame is a great and noble prize. It is a prize well worth competing for. It is not yet too late to try to win it. I believe there are men in the Cabinet who would try to win it, if they were free. True, all their powers and aspirations. It is not yet too late, I say, to become competitors for that prize."

The appointment of this appeal to the present day and hour is something more than remarkable. The House was, in the end, as Gladstone puts it, "more than good." True, after five days of debate and party drilling, the motions were defeated by 354 votes to 223, but the majority was the less, one of the greatest moral triumphs ever won in the House of Commons.

A STRANGE SUGGESTION.

Other Governments Besides Germany Covet Canada.

It was announced the other day that William G. McAdoo, the son-in-law of President Wilson, had made the suggestion that the United States might buy Bermuda and the West Indies, in order to enable Great Britain to pay their debt to the republic. This proposal caused something of a consternation in the British Dominions mentioned, and many meetings of protest were held. At first sight it did not seem as though Canada could be concerned, and the developments that have followed indicate a carefully-arranged campaign to spread abroad the idea that the United States is anxious to get a Near Eastern policy. This dates Gladstone writes in his diary, under date of April 27, 1877, "I took my decision, a severe one, in face of my not having a single approver in the upper circle. But had I in the first days of September asked the same body whether I ought to write my pamphlet, I believe the unanimous answer would have been, No."

A few days later, Lord Granville and Lord Wolverton came round to see him, and he explained to them his view to endeavor to prevent any kind of breach in the party, but when Gladstone faced the House on his motions, on April 7, it was in the presence of tremendously hostile ministerial forces and a sullen and silent Opposition. To quote from his diary again: "For over two hours I was assailed from

Old British Industries Are Enjoying Prosperity With All Prices Tripled

THAT Great Britain finds her position with regard to export trade in certain lines, such as cutlery, chinaware and toys, greatly strengthened by post-war conditions and that she is prepared to make every effort to improve the opportunities offered is indicated by recent trade reports.

The cutlery industry of Sheffield is again in a most flourishing condition, after a steady decline of almost fifty years. With the elimination of German competition in this field every maker in Sheffield is enjoying undreamed of prosperity. Works are besieged by buyers asking for goods, reversing the usual order of things, when makers are the ones seeking to obtain orders. There is no question of finding a market for goods. One British exhibitor for each article before it is produced. It is reported that the same would be the case if the entire Sheffield output could be disposed of.

The scarcity of labor in this line, the greatly increased wage scales of the workers, and the higher prices that will prevail for cutlery and electroplated tableware are strongly marked features of the new conditions. Sheffield cutlers and grinders were poorly paid before the war, this being true of even the skilled workers, so they find there are opportunities for earning pay at their work. Operatives are turning into proprietors, almost 500 of these individual manufacturers of cutlery having come into existence overnight as it were. Big and little, progressive or otherwise, they are all making money, and Sheffield cutlery

Last summer a friend had acute indigestion so badly, she suffered agony after a meal. With difficulty she was induced to try Gallagher's Blood Purifier, and was soon alright. Now it is a family remedy. The other evening I met a young farmer acquaintance and he told me that he had doctored for years for acidity of the stomach and indigestion, and was completely cured by our Blood Purifier. Every day we hear similar stories. Is it any wonder that I am getting more enthusiastic about it every day ? If you are thus afflicted, it will do the same for you. Your friend, Jack Spoill. Entertained the G.W.V.A.

The officers and members of Napanee Lodge No. 86, I.O.O.F., entertained the members of the G.W.V.A. on Tuesday evening in their lodge rooms. In addition to cards and games a splendid programme was given in which the orchestra, led by Prof. Baird, took a prominent part, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Quartettes by Messrs. Chas. Black, C. A. Wiseman, A. E. Paul, E. B. Weiss, solos by Mr. Northwood, and old time songs by the soldier boys and the members contributed greatly to the evening's entertainment. Short addresses by Chairman U. M. Wilson, C. C. A. Dr. Cameron Wilson, G. F. Rutan, and Capt. R. G. H. Travers were also enjoyed. A light lunch was afterwards served, and all present voted it a splendid evening's entertainment.

DENBIGH

The weather has so far been rather backward for farming operations, and no seeding of any kind has yet been done here though most of the farmers have their land all ready for it. A scarcity of seed grain is also complained of.

A change of mail carriers on the Denbigh-Griffith mail route has again taken place. Albert Inwood has taken the contract of that route over from Oscar Rutan together with the lease for Arthur Cranshaw's farm, and has moved on and commenced work on the latter. O. Ruttan intends to move on a farm near Ruby Mine.

Robert Jackson left for Enterprise where he has been engaged as cheesemaker for this season. Mrs. Jackson is staying with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Both, but will soon follow her husband to their new home.

Fred Stein, who has been employed in a lumber camp in New Ontario since last fall, has arrived home and is going to stay and work his father's farm.

OUR AIM IS TO PLEASE

Dear Sir :—

I saw in a village paper where they print a few verses out of the bible in their weekly issue. I liked the idea. We are perfect strangers but I liked the splendid article on prohibition in the Express last fall, and the little poems by J. Ames were good and helpful.

Next Sunday is Mothers' Day, and I'd like very much to see the following verses inserted in this week's issue, or next week :

"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you"—Isa. 66-13.

"For the son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost"—Luke 19-10.

"But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you"—Mat. 6-33.

Thanking you in advance.

A WORTHY APPEAL

Napanee, May 6th, 1920.

To the People of Napanee and District :

The Salvation Army is making a special self-denial appeal throughout Canada during the second week in May for funds to carry on their special social service work, and for the purpose of making the appeal more effective each community is being organized in a manner similar to the methods pursued during the war in obtaining funds for the British Red Cross, Patriotic Funds, Y. M. C. A., overseas work, etc.

The Salvation Army did special work during the war, in addition to its usual social service work, and since the end it has been found that there is a special field for the Salvation Army, and a work which it would appear that no other organization can successfully perform. The Army is well organized and has officers specially trained for said service work, but their efforts are handicapped by reason of the fact that they have not sufficient funds.

The Army, outside of its regular service, supports and maintains especially in the large centres, where slum conditions exist, maternity homes for poor mothers and their babies, small children's homes where parental care can be closely approximated, rescue homes for wayward girls and unmarried mothers, women's shelters for temporary dependent cases, police court work where first offenders are taken in hand and followed up, free labor bureau, industrial work shops where derelict men support themselves. These are a few of the Army activitis. They are doing it well and at a minimum of expens. We must give them substantial help.

A committee has been formed and a canvas will be made during the week beginning May 10th. Receive the canvassers with a smile and an open pocket book. Give liberally and pleasantly, for it is more blessed to give than to receive.

If the canvasser does not call on you you call on some member of the executive who will be glad to receive your subscription.

OUR ABORIGINES.

Origin of the Indians Remains a Mystery.

The origin of the Indian cannot be determined by history, nor will calculation ever arrive at a probable certainty. No two authorities agree. For a period of over two hundred years the subject has engrossed the attention of learned men, and yet the question, "By whom was America peopled?" remains without satisfactory answer.

In 1637 Thomas Morton wrote a book to prove that the Indians were of Latin origin. John Joselyn held, in 1638, that they were of Tartar descent. Cotton Mather inclined to the opinion that they were Scythians. James Adair seems to have been fully convinced that they were descendants of the Israelites—the lost tribes; and; after thirty years' residence among them, published, in 1775, an account of their manners and traditions, from which he deduced his conclusions.

Dr. Mitchell, after considerable investigation, concluded "that the Indian races, Malays, Tartars and Scandinavians, contributed to make up the great American population, who were the authors of the various works and antiquities found on the continent."

DeWitt Clinton held, that "the probability is that American was peopled from various quarters of the Old World, and that its predominant race is the Scythian or Tartarian."

Calmet, a distinguished author, brings forward the writings of Hornius, son of Theodosius the Great, who affirms that "at or about the commencement of the Christian era, voyages from Africa and Spain into the Atlantic Ocean were both frequent and celebrated"; and that "there is strong probability that the Romans and Carthagenians, even 300 B.C., were well acquainted with the existence of this country," added to that there are "tokens of the presence of the Greeks, Romans, Persians and Carthagenians in many parts of the continent."

Then Priest, in his "American Antiquities," states that his observations had led him "to the conclusion that the two great continents, Asia and America, were peopled by similar races of men."

Sugar Bearing Trees.

Prof. John Davidson's discovery of a rare specimen of sugar, scientifically known as meleitose, in a limited area in British Columbia, on leaf stem of Douglas fir trees is arousing considerable interest throughout that province. Previous to the discovery by the head of the department of botany in the British Columbia University, meleitose was obtained only in Turkestan and Persia.

Prof. Davidson first heard of the strange phenomenon in 1914. Stories had come from the interior telling of large gatherings of Indian tribes, who, during the summer would hold pow-wows for a month or more, depending on plants for their food. Answers which Prof. Davidson received regarding his enquiries as to what plants were eaten by the Indians, so aroused his curiosity that he decided to explore the upper country. While he was preparing for this trip he received a specimen of Douglas fir sugar from James Tait of Lillooet Bridge, who said that Indians in his district had used it many years for food. Immediate investigations were made by Prof. Davidson who was surprised to find that no previous record had been made of the existence of Douglas fir sugar. The professor says that the sugar cannot be relied on as an annual crop, as some years it is abundant, other years very little is found.

The region in which the sugar-bearing firs are most abundant includes the driest and hottest part of the British Columbia dry belt, namely, Thompson Valley, west of the mouth of the Nicola river, near the junction of the Thompson and Fraser rivers, including Lytton and other Lillooet in the Fraser Valley, Spence's Bridge, Kamloops, Savona, Nicola and Similkameen valleys, and is said to be in the southern portions of the Okanagan Valley.

When asked about the commercial possibilities of the discovery, Prof. Davidson said sugar-bearing trees were in such a limited area and conditions under which they exuded sugar have to be so ideal, that its use as a household substitute for the Cuban variety is unlikely. It would probably cost $66 a pound, he added. Its chief value is to scientific men and chemists, with whom it is in great demand. They use it to test other grades of sugar, as meleitose has three times the food value of ordinary cane sugar.

A Prehistoric Niagara.

What engineers believe is an ancient Niagara Falls, buried for thousands of years, has been uncovered during the course of excavations for the new Welland Ship Canal, reports the Universal Engineer of New York. It says:

"The 'skeleton' of this great prehistoric cataract, according to engineers in charge of construction, was fully as wide and probably had a greater fall than the present Niagara Falls. The first indications of the former cataract came to light when workmen uncovered a series of ledges in the form of steps with a total drop of twenty-five feet and a width of four hundred feet. The rock from this point sloped sharply and at a distance of about one hundred feet from the end of the ledges showed a depth of seventy-five feet.

"Here was discovered what is believed to have been the main precipice over which the rushing water plunged hundreds of feet to its bed below. The rim of the rock shoved unmistakable signs of having been worn smooth by the action of water rushing over it for countless years. There is nothing in history that mentions this former cataract, but experts believe it once formed the chief link between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. Eight-Mile Creek, a small stream, now flows over part of the course of the prehistoric waterway, and this in turn will soon become the new ship canal.

RUSTLE OF PAPER UNNERVED HER

Mrs. Holmes Praises Tanlac For Restoring Her Health In A Short Time.

"It seems really remarkable that it has taken only two bottles of Tanlac to completely overcome my six years of troubles," said Mrs. Olive Holmes, who lives at 400 Atlantic Street, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, while talking to the Tanlac representative the other day.

"It was about six years ago that my health began to fail, she continued, "and since that time I have suffered from a complication of troubles. My nerves were so terribly shattered that even the rustling of a newspaper would upset me and I was so restless at night that it was almost impossible for me to get a night's rest and sometimes it would be three o'clock before I could close my eyes. I had a poor appetite and indigestion caused me so much misery that I hardly ever cared whether I ate anything or not, and I was troubled with dreadful headaches that often kept me in bed for days at a time. I felt tired out all the time and lost so much in weight that I looked almost like a frame and was so weak that I had to give up my housework altogether.

"A friend of mine told me about Tanlac and now I am certainly thankful to her for her advice, for it has proved to be just the thing I needed, and before I had finished my second bottle I felt like a different woman entirely. My nerves are so steady that I can stand any kind of noise and I am never troubled with headaches any more. I have a splendid appetite and can eat just anything I please without any ill effects and in the least and my food is giving me so much nourishment that I am stronger than I have been in years. I sleep like a child and rest perfectly and I never have that worn-out feeling, but instead I have so much energy and strength about me that my housework is a pleasure for me. I am so happy for what Tanlac has done for me that I wish I could tell everybody about this medicine."

Tanlac is sold in Napane at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wilgarville by S. JACKSON. (advt)

THE I.O.D.E. WAR MEMORIAL CAMPAIGN

"A great concerted movement of the Daughters of the Empire throughout Canada is taking place.

This is the first great national undertaking for a work to be done by this fine organization, and every Chapter, is, we believe, eagerly striving to reach the goal, which was set by the resolution for the War Memorial, as called unanimously at the Annual meeting of the Order last May.

The scheme has been heartily endorsed by the leading educationists of Ont., and the following detail is being worked out with care and attention:—

A Standing Board of Trustees has been appointed, which is composed of University Principles, and leading educationists in every province.

We must strain every nerve to gain our objective of $500,000 so that we can prove once more that the Daughters of the Empire, standing with other women workers "behind the lines", have brought the torch flung by those dead young hands and, as an Order, are raising a monument greater, and more deeply purchased, than any other that could be founded in the present stage of the world's history, in memory of our dead heroes.

They gave their lives willingly for a great gain. We make this small gift in memory of a great sacrifice.

Therefore, citizens of Napanee and of the County of Lennox and Addington, when you are asked to help this fund, do not hesitate or hold back, but give generously of the means at your command remembering that we do not measure our gratitude in dollars and cents, but by our ability to give as liberally as possible, in establishing an enduring monument that Time in its ravages cannot destroy, but can only increase in value to unnumbered beneficiaries, thus giving evidence not only of the undying glory of those whose inspiring memory we commemorate, but also our acknowledgement of a debt beyond our power to liquidate adequately.

Miss Richardson, Treas. of the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter I.O.D.E., will gratefully receive and acknowledge donations for this object that may be sent her.

There will be another interesting item next week.

Flying In the Arctic.

Canadian aviators, with active service experience, are being sought through the Aero Club of Canada to fly to Moose Factory, located at the south end of James Bay, and later to photograph the Belcher Islands, on the east coat of Hudson Bay.

The Belcher Island flight is looked upon as a difficult one owing to the inaccuracies of the maps. On the islands there is a great quantity of iron and oil, and the description given by the discovering parties make the pilots scratch their heads in wonder as they view the Canadian charts. The islands are mere pin points on the maps, and far out in the Hudson Bay, while those who know state there is a lake 40 miles long on one island, and that they are approximately 60 miles from the main land.

When the Belcher Island flight is undertaken charts and maps will be discarded. The aviators will seek a clear dry atmosphere, and ascend approximately ten thousand feet or over, giving a view of nearly one hundred miles. They will keep the main coast in view, parallel it, and look to the open bay for the islands.

The pilots on their return will be able to give the correct outline of the bay, and will have photographs of the islands, with their accurate location.

British East Africa Is Not a Place for Women, Declares Lady Northey

"BRITISH East Africa," said Lady Northey, the wife of the Governor-General of that protectorate, "is no place for women, unless of course they accompany their husbands who may be employed in an official capacity, or may be planting or farming on a large scale. In the latter case they must have capital; even so, the husband usually goes out first to make some sort of preparation for his wife."

Sir Edward and Lady Northey are making a prolonged visit to London, owing to Lord Milner's wish to seize the opportunity of the governor's presence in England to discuss with him many urgent problems concerning British East Africa.

Continuing the expression of her views regarding the possibility of women settlers in the protectorate, Lady Northey said: "People are apt to forget that British East Africa is an absolutely new country, without the railways and houses, with all its wealth of natural resources lying latent and with a teeming native population as yet savage and undisciplined. It is a country in which the white man, if he is to keep his dignity, cannot himself do manual work but must be in a position to employ native labor."

"If there are absolutely no openings for anyone without capital, would it be advisable for women who have specialized in agriculture, and who have capital, to go and try their fortune there?" Lady Northey was asked. "No, such a thing would be quite impracticable," she said, "though I do know of one such case out there—two women in plenty of money, thorough sportswomen, and steeplechase riders, are running their own estate near Nairobi, but there there is absolutely nothing to distinguish them from men and they are quite an exceptional case. Africa, generally speaking, for a young and pleasing woman would not be possible, for apart from the question of natives, the life is much too free and easy altogether for her to be entirely on her own."

"This country," continued Lady Northey, "was not so very long ago being boomed as one to which intending settlers with little or no capital could go and make good. This is an entirely erroneous idea; it is no good a man thinking of going to British East Africa unless he has plenty of capital; then, I admit, the possibilities are unlimited. The man with £500 or so must try his venture in another country, for in such a country as British East Africa the man with small means becomes only a burden. It is a country in which everything remains to be done; fortunes will be made there, but before this can happen money must be put into the country.

"The labor problem in British East Africa is a very difficult one; the African native is not at all inclined to work, but Sir Edward has a scheme for the registration of natives which he is intending to place before the Government, so that every native will be obliged to work. This would, of course, be a great step forward, for were the difficulties of obtaining labor solved, Englishmen would be far more ready to invest their money in the country. Up to the present, labor has been a very uncertain quantity, which sometimes no amount of money will secure."

"As an illustration of how essential it is to have funds out there," said Lady Northey, "I will tell you the case of a lady who went out with the idea of opening and running a hostel in Nairobi for people fresh out from England; the idea was for them to live at the hostel until they had fixed up a home for themselves. Well, the hostel was started, but the lady very soon became aware of the fact that she could not carry on without more funds and made a strong appeal to the Government to help her; the help was refused and the hostel closed. This, and the two ladies I have mentioned, who run their own farm, are the only ventures made by women on their own initiative in the country that I know of.

"The life is certainly a very pleasant one for women whose time is their own and who can take life very leisurely, and who in addition have their own car; under any other conditions the life would not be a very desirable one for Englishwomen."

It Was Good-bye.

A Frenchman, guest at a London hotel, had just been presented with his bill. Though he paid it without formal protest, he was most indignant at its amount. "I wish to zee ze proprietor!" he exclaimed to the clerk. In a moment the proprietor entered. The Frenchman was all smiles. "Ah!" he exclaimed, "I must embrace you!" "But why should you wish to embrace me, sir?" asked the astonished hotelkeeper. "I do not understand." "Look at zees bill!" "Yes, your receipted bill. What of it?" "What of it? Simply zees, sare, it means zat I shall neveaire, no neveaire, see you again."

"Mind," he observed, "if you cannot kick the ball, kick an opponent. Now, let's get busy. Where's the ball?" "Bother the ball," came the reply of a keen pupil; "let's get on with the game."

MARY, WAY BACK THERE

Oh yes, I'm from the country, and I never was before
In a big, noisy city, with its screeching 'ills and roar;
Its crowds of people going in a hurry everywhere,
I'm going back to Mary, to my
Mary, way back there.

Of course I've seen the movies,
and "acting girl" at the Grand,
I've laughed to see the antics of the clown, and heard the band;
I'm going home to-morrow, I'm sick of its gaudy glare,
I'm going home to Mary, my dear
Mary, way back there.

SIX LITTLE HOUSES

Six little brown houses all in a row,
Each one is so like its brother,
From the broad eaves down to the walk below,
You cannot tell one from the other;
A wall ivy-twined comes close up behind,
And not a back door can you see;
But the garden in front with flowers is shining
Is a beautiful place to be.

From the little brown houses in a row
Come the little ones humming a song;
Down to the sweet scented blossoms they go,
You can see them the whole day long.
One burys his nose in a pink blush rose,
Another peeps under a bell
Where the poppy blows, and the pansy grows,
To the violet, and primrose dell.

They visit them all, the hollyhocks tall,
The golden glow, phlox, and sweet
pea,
Forget-me-not, small and white
bindweed;
Each blossom is crowned with a bee,
Not a flower is crushed by their little feet
As they clamor them o'er and o'er
And each petal treat in search of the sweet
In their little brown houses to store.

Poet Season Against War.

Apologists for war have, says the New York World, been almost of one voice in alleging its idealism as a redeeming feature. War, to be sure, involved human suffering and desolation, but above and beyond the carnage and ennobling the waste of life and treasure were the patriotism and devotion and brotherhood it fostered. It might brutalize for the time being, but in the end it exalted nations and spiritualized them with a baptism of blood.

This, indeed, is characteristically the view poets are supposed to take of war, yet it is the young British soldier-poet Siegfried Sassoon who most rudely challenges it. In his opinion, the great world war has been a nightmare of destruction and nothing else. It has been an orgy of blood without compensating gain, and so far from making the world safe for democracy "it has had a retrograding effect, at least throughout Europe, and civilization has been hurled back into a grosser materialism than it ever knew before."

In not this the view which sober second-thought is compelling even idealists to take of war? If war ennobles, Europe and all the world as the result of the most colossal of wars ought to be purged and purified of dross as never before in history. As a matter of fact, the torment of human passion has wrecked the great institutions of the world and loosened elements of disorder in a way to threaten political stability for generations to come. It has killed the spirit as well as the flesh. If this is the exaltation of war, humanity may well pray for the corroding and corrupting influences of peace.

ICELAND A FREE STATE.

Story That Canada Would Adopt Country Was Wrong.

Information has been received from Copenhagen, Denmark, that the Danish Consul-General in London, J. E. Boeggild, has been appointed Danish Minister to Iceland. Denmark surprised the world last year by recognizing Iceland as a free and sovereign state, united with Denmark only by the same king. In further acknowledgment of Iceland's position as an independent state, the Danish Government has now sent a Minister to Iceland, the first ever credited to the old Saga Island.

This recent action of Denmark sets at rest the story current last year that Iceland would be adopted by the Dominion of Canada after the Peace Treaty was signed. The story always seemed ridiculous to Canadians.

Mr. Boeggild seems especially fitted for this post, as he has Icelandic blood in his veins. On the maternal side he is descended from the well-known Tulinius family of Iceland, which traces its origin back to Thorfinn Karlsefni, one of the famous Norsemen who discovered America nearly a thousand years ago. Karlsefni, of whom a statue was recently erected in Philadelphia, was the first white man to settle in America, spending two years in "Wineland," where his wife, Gudrid, gave birth to a boy, who was called Snorri. From Snorri descended a numerous and distinguished lineage, among whom is numbered the Tulinius family, and the new Minister to Iceland can thus lay claim to being descended from the first white man born in America.

Iceland, which has now formally taken its place among the free states of the world, being absolutely independent in home affairs and only represented by Denmark in foreign affairs, has an area of 40,437 square miles. But the inhabitants of Iceland number only about 90,000. The mountain ranges and extensive lava deserts make a large part of Iceland uninhabitable. Since 1870 a considerable emigration from Iceland to America has taken place, and about 15,000 Icelanders are now living in Canada and the United States.

Although the main industry of Iceland is farming, the country does not produce a single bushel of grain. Wheat, corn, barley—everything in the line of cereals—has to be imported. There are no trees on Iceland, and the story, published last year in some newspapers, that the Icelanders were suffering from famine and had to make bread out of the bark of trees was, therefore, an amusing piece of fiction. But grasses grow in abundance and on their meadows the inhabitants are dependent for the keep of their live stock.

Sheep are Iceland's main source of wealth. The 90,000 inhabitants own more than 600,000 sheep, exclusive of lambs. Large quantities of wool and sheep skins are exported yearly. The number of cattle is not quite 30,000, but the Icelanders nevertheless are able to export about 300,000 pounds of butter yearly, having learned the co-operative dairy system from Denmark.

The Icelanders are noted as some of the ablest, most daring and persevering fishermen in the world, and the cod fisheries in Icelandic waters stand second to none in importance; excellent profit is also realized from the herring fishery. The fishing was formerly carried on from open boats, but the Icelanders now own a fine modern, strictly up-to-date fishing fleet, consisting of decked motor boats.

Iceland is not a rich country, the national wealth being estimated at about 120,000,000 kroner, or $33,000,000. But the Icelanders point with pride to the fact that the people's national wealth yields a higher interest than does theirs.

Before the war, Iceland was in the unique position of having no national debt. Instead, it had a balance of 250,000 kroner. But during the war it became necessary for the Icelandic Government to take over most of the trade and for this purpose heavy loans had to be raised. At the beginning of 1918 the national debt, therefore, amounted to nearly twenty million kroner (over five million dollars), but for this the Government has values in steamships, merchandise, etc.

The IMPOSTOR

By FRANK L. PACKARD

(Copyright.)

Among other things, hat catching his eye instantly, was a little packet of crisp, new, American hundred-dollar gold certificates. He counted them wonderingly—one thousand one hundred dollars. He laid them down and picked up a wallet. It contained some silver and a few dollars in small bills.

Wallen passed his hand a little dazedly across his eyes; and then continued his examination. There was a photograph, a little faded, a little old-fashioned, the photograph of a very beautiful woman. He turned it over. On the back was written: "Elizabeth Powers Wallen."

His mother! He had never known his mother. He held the photograph for a long time in his hand, gazing at the face that now somehow seemed to smile back at him—then put it reverently aside.

There remained perhaps a dozen documents; mortgages in his father's favor, stock certificates and securities of various sorts, the total running into many thousands of dollars—sixty thousand, he put it at a guess, figuring the certificates at par value. Lastly, there was a small sealed envelope.

He opened it with a curious sense of excitement. Here, perhaps, was the secret that had bound up his father's life so mysteriously, and—no—he whistled again in that low, surprised way. It was his father's will, a terse, short document, bequeathing everything "to my son, Stacey Wallen, whom I charge with the care of my faithful servant Gunga as long as the latter shall live."

Wallen got up and began to pace the little cabin. Gunga! The will was dated at San Francisco two years ago. Where was Gunga now?

Dead, perhaps, since the two were inseparable and Gunga had not come aboard with his master at Honolulu—so Captain Layston had stated. Captain Layston! Wallen stared at the articles that littered the bunk—the conviction slowly dawning upon him that he had wofully misjudged the Monleigh's commander and mentally owed the other an apology for jumping so hastily to conclusions.

There was not even a shadow of proof that his father's death, after all, had not been accidental. His suspicions had arisen naturally enough in view of the past, and his own recent escape; but certainly it appeared to be decidedly "far-fetched" now, and certainly it was no deep-laid plot on the part of Captain Layston, such as, in a hazy, fantastical way, he had imagined it might have been.

What possible motive could Layston have in carrying out the original purpose for which he had been chartered, except that he felt in honor bound to do so? None!

And if the man had been dishonest he could have put that eleven hundred dollars lying there on the bunk into his own pocket and no one would have been the wiser! Even the matter of the wireless, which in his suspicious state of mind had assumed perhaps exaggerated proportions, had been shot to pieces, so to speak, as far as it being there for any ulterior purpose was concerned—and by irrefutable evidence —Helen MacKay's!

And with a vision of brown eyes and gloriously truant hair before him and the thought of tomorrow when the vision should materialize into reality again he turned into his bunk.

And the "tomorrow" and the two days that followed, not only dispelled all final doubt from his mind but found him responding frankly to the general good-fellowship which he found existing in the cabin.

They passed quickly those three days—too quickly. And they were the happiest days Wallen had ever known—because Helen MacKay had made them happy days, and because a new glad thing had come into his life.

Had she, too, come to care? He did not know. Sometimes, in little intimate ways, in a smile or a glance or a word or a quick, trustful touch of the hand, he read the answer to his unspoken question as his soul wanted to read the answer.

And so they had passed those days, and it was the fourth night now since he had come aboard—and tomorrow they would be in Singapore.

He lay tossing in his bunk. A tumult of thought kept his brain active and alert. Singapore! What would Singapore bring him? Who was this Drink-House Sam?

It mattered a great deal now—a great deal more than it had mattered before.

For before, with a sort of berserk rage, he had been willing to take a gambler's chance, and, win or lose, stake his life against this devil, whoever he might be, that had tried to strike him down without warning, without a chance to defend himself; but now his life meant more to him—he wanted to live—for her.

"Thank God," he muttered, "that at least everything is all right on board here!"

He turned over and lay for perhaps ten minutes, trying to compose himself to sleep—but his eyes insisted on remaining fastened on a queer little white patch by the door. What was it? It wasn't the moonlight through the porthole reflecting on anything.

He raised himself up on his elbow several times to make sure of that. Finally, in a fretful way, he got out of his bunk to investigate. It was a piece of paper that had evidently been pushed in under the threshold—but whether ten minutes or two hours ago he had no idea.

Wallen picked up the paper, switched on the light—and suddenly it seemed as though his immediate surroundings had vanished, and he was living again a scene of many years ago. He was standing on the stairway of that grim, gray, lonely house in the dead of night, a trembling child in his nightclothes, and below in the hall, holding a candle, was his father, and Gunga was bending over a form on the floor, and his father's voice was in his ears: "Look again, Gunga. Has he one finger on the left hand?"

And then Gunga's answer: "I have looked, sahib, and the hand is whole."

Wallen's face was strangely white. On the piece of parchment that he held was crudely traced a human hand, and the fingers, save for the forefinger, had the appearance of having been hacked away.

CHAPTER V.

Drink-House Sam of Singapore.

There are two harbors at Singapore; one opposite the town, which although little more than an open roadstead where the ships discharge by means of lighters, affords a safe and convenient anchorage; the other, land-locked, fringed with wharves and warehouses, lies three miles west.

It was already dusk when the Monleigh, finding a berth amongst a nest of junks, sailing and steam craft of all descriptions and all nationalities, dropped anchor in the crowded roadstead at Singapore.

Wallen paused for a final word on the threshold of Captain Layston's cabin.

"It's understood, then, Captain Layton," he said quietly. "No shore leave for anybody—and steam up. I'll only be ashore a few hours, and will be away from here again before morning."

Captain Layston was pulling dubiously at his chin.

"Yes; and by morning the customs and quarantine officials will be looking for the ship that slipped out without any 'clearance'!"

"I hardly think the Monleigh's arrival will create much of a furor," replied Wallen dryly. "I've a few hours' private business ashore, and then we'll get Miss MacKay right across to Sumatra—and I don't want a rowdy, drunken crew to do it with."

"All right!" said Layton. "Whatever you say, Mr. Wallen."

Wallen, with a nod, stepped aft along the deck, entered the smoking room preparatory to descending the companionway—and came face to face with Helen MacKay.

"Of course," she said demurely, "I think it's perfectly splendid that you are going to run the ship all the way to Sumatra on account of little me; but I think it's sinfully selfish of you to go ashore all alone this evening when we're only going to be here for a few hours. Please, Mr. Yacht-Captain, won't you take me too?"

It was the first time he would have avoided her if he could have done so.

"I—you—that is, well, you see, Miss MacKay—I—I—can't very well. Look here!" cried Wallen impulsively—and caught her hands and held them. "I know you're more than half serious, and that you're keenly disappointed at not going ashore. It's true I've been a beast today; but I—I've been worried. This morning I had almost made up my mind to run to Sumatra, and not touch here at all; but—there's a little business that I felt I must attend to this evening, and—well, that's what I'm going ashore for. You—you understand, I'm sure, Miss MacKay."

Her eyes widened, partly in merriment at his confusion, partly in a puzzled way.

"Oh!"—there was only bewilderment in her eyes now. "I—I'm not quite sure I understand. I thought it was quite settled when we left Pebi that we should come here."

"Yes, so it was," he acknowledged awkwardly. He bit his lips.

He could not tell her that his brain was sick with the effort to grapple with a peril that he knew now beyond question lurked aboard the ship, and that, because it was unseen, because he could not identify it in the form of say one, or two, or all aboard the ship and fight it in the open, had made the hours since that morning like a hideous nightmare!

"I'll—I'll explain tomorrow, Miss MacKay," he said hurriedly. "You mustn't—"

"I'm not!" she laughed. "I'm only keeping you." And pushing him playfully toward the companionway, she ran out onto the deck.

A moment later, Wallen, at the foot of the ship's ladder, was running his eye sharply over the half score of shore boats that pushed and bumped against each other and the gangway's platform, and whose occupants at the prospect of a fare were screaming and yelling in a frantic effort to attract his special and undivided attention.

A Malay boatman had the strategic position alongside the grating.

Wallen unceremoniously pushed the craft away with his foot, and beckoned to a Chinaman who was next in line. As he clambered into the boat he looked up. Helen MacKay was leaning over the rail of the boat deck.

"Take good care of yourself!" she called out merrily. "Singapore means 'the city of lions,' you know. Don't run your head into one of their mouths!" And with a wave of her hand she was gone.

It brought a sudden, premonitory shock to Wallen—and then a grim, cold smile. The city of lions! It was only a joke with her, a little lighthearted fling—with him, God knew it might prove a ghastly reality!

At first, when he had found that paper on his cabin floor, he had thought, as he had told her, that he would take her straight to Sumatra, get her off the ship; and then second thoughts had convinced him that the danger which threatened him did not threaten her. She was safe there on board.

But this thing—it was not only the personal peril—it rose a shuddering, mocking barrier between them! Mocking? Yes!

He or they, the devil or devils who had murdered his father, were playing with him as a cat plays with a mouse! Why had nothing happened to him in those three days from Pobi, while he had been living in a fool's paradise of imagined security?

His lips thinned into a straight line. Well, perhaps they would play too long! He would settle it tonight. When he came back to the ship he would know—or there would be one less scoundrel in Singapore! That was what he was going for now—to Drink-House Sam of Singapore.

Who was it aboard the Monleigh who had put that paper under his cabin door? She had called him grumpy all that day—and all that day he had been studying the crew, batalguing in his mind every man aboard.

It could not well be all—a plot involving the whole ship and crew seemed out of the question.

Not one of the officers had he any reason to suspect above the others! though it was true, and a little disturbing now, that Captain Layston, in turning over his father's effects, had not included the fatal pistol that, if the story were true, was obviously his father's property—but that might readily have been but an oversight.

There was Mott, who had grown more surly every day.

Wallen shook his head. Mott's attitude was easily accounted for—the man, as witness the ride at Pobi, if it had not been glaringly evident on board since then, was attentive to Miss MacKay, and resented his, Wallen's, usurpation of what he evidently considered his property.

What of the crew then?

They were a hard lot and a polyglot one!

The English and Americans amongst them had every appearance of being the sweepings of the slums of London, Liverpool, New York, and, by men of their ilk, the more vicious seaports of the far East. The rest were of every nationality—two of the coal-passers were Chinese coolies, the steward was from the West Indies, the cook was a Frenchman from Port Said, and two Danes, a Swede, a Kanaka, from the Sandwich islands, and three Japanese completed the roster.

Wallen looked up, and fixed his eyes speculatively on his Chinese boatman. They were almost at the landing.

"You sabe Drink-House Sam?" he demanded abruptly.

The Chinaman smirked knowingly. "Me sabe," he replied.

"All right," said Wallen. "You take me there. But first, you take me where the stores are, I want to buy some things, and I don't know my way about."

"Me Sabe," He Replied.

"Me sabe," said the Chinaman again. "All same velly good guide."

He proved to be. Within half an hour after landing, Wallen had completed the purchase of an excellent automatic pistol and ammunition, and was following the Chinaman back along a dark street near the water front. Another few minutes of twistings and turnings, and the Chinaman had halted before an uninviting-looking, boisterly in an equally uninviting-looking neighborhood.

"Dlink-House Sam's," announced the guide. "Blim-bly you all same go back ship? Me wait?"

"No," said Wallen, as he paid the other. "That's all. Good-night, John!"

The Chinaman disappeared.

Wallen surveyed the building before which he stood. It was one of those Easternized-European wooden structures, two stories high, the front rooms on the second story opening directly onto the veranda. With the general air of being disreputably out at elbows, it bore all the earmarks of a sailor's boarding house of the lowest type.

Wallen stepped forward, pushed the bar-room door open, and entered.

A bar ran down one side; a score of small tables occupied the main portion of the room, and around these were clustered some twenty-five or thirty rough-looking hands, evidently on shore leave from the harbor's shipping—and making the most of it.

Behind the bar were two men, one of whom Wallen made no doubt, was Drink-House Sam, presumably, the proprietor—a big man in shirt sleeves, the sleeves rolled to the elbows over puffed, blue-veined arms, a man whose face was florid and hard-lined, with eyes close-set, and whose close-cropped hair, with little white skin-spots showing where the clippers had done their work too thoroughly, lent a peculiarly repellent aspect to his general appearance. A steel-like glint held for an instant in Wallen's eyes—and vanished! Drink-House Sam of Singapore!

Wallen crossed to the bar, and confronted the big man in shirt sleeves.

"Are you the proprietor?" he asked. "The man the coolies call Drink-House Sam?"

The other eyed him furtively.

"That's me; Sam Marle, by rights," he admitted curtly. "What can I do for you, mister?"

"Well," said Wallen, lowering his voice, "I'd like a few minutes of your time, somewhere in private."

"What for?" demanded Marle.

Wallen leaned across the bar.

"It's about the Upolo," he said confidentially.

The man stared at him for a moment, a curiously mingled expression of cunning and surprise creeping into the small, black, red-rimmed, shifty eyes—then he stepped abruptly out from behind the bar, led the way to an empty table at the end of the room by the rear door, and flung himself down into a chair.

Wallen followed, but remained standing on the opposite side of the table.

"I can't say I call this very private," he protested.

"I'll do till I know more of your business!" grunted Marle. "Take it or leave it. I ain't for sneakin' off with the first stranger that comes in, and havin' every last one of these swine here get to figurin' I'm puttin' up some sort of a deal to shanghai his bloomin' carcase. And sit down, mister—you're showin' more'n is necessary of your good clothes."

It was true.

His standing there after the other had seated himself only served to attract further attention. A crowd at the next table was already indulging sotto voce, in uncomplimentary and drunkenly offensive remarks.

"Now shoot the works!" prompted Drink-House Sam. "What about this 'ere Upolo?"

Wallen was casting about in his mind for what to say now. If he could play the man, arouse the other's fear perhaps, or his curiosity that would be backed by fear, or his cunning, or his interest sufficiently to get him some where alone without giving away his own hand.

Ah! Yes, he had it now. Helen MacKay had unwittingly furnished him the lead with her laughing reference to putting his head into the lion's mouth. If he said innocently that Ting Wah had sent him!

Drink-House Sam would naturally conclude that the Chinese accomplice was still playing into his hand, and had sent him, Wallen, back into the power of this rat-eyed murderer with the bloated face to complete the work that Ting Wah, for some reason or other, had been unable to accomplish.

Wallen's hands that were thrust into his trousers' pockets clenched fiercely. This man before him, just a few feet away with just the table top between them, was Drink-House Sam at last, he man who knew, the man he had dreamed of night and day in his long convalescence at MacKnight's as the man who some day he would treat as he would treat a poison snake!

Queer that he was seeing that screaming, maddened wretch, Won Su, jump overboard again.

His mind seemed to grow almost ghoulish. That flabby neck of the man in front of him was Drink-House Sam's, the man who had loosed a pack of Chinese thugs upon him—how far in would his fingers sink?

"Well, you got lockjaw?" growled Drink-House Sam. "This 'ere Upolo, you was sayin'?"

"Yes," said Wallen, and smiled engagingly. "It's a bit of a longish story, but I'll cut it short with a word—yellow Jack cleaned her out somewhere in the Java sea."

"Huh!" snorted Marle. "Everybody knows that. Most of us can read, mister. She was picked up by the gunboat Phyllis a few weeks ago; and a 'orrid mess she was, accordin' to accounts."

"Is that so? I hadn't heard she'd been picked up," said Wallen slowly. "But that's nothing to do with what brought me here. You know a chink aboard her called Ting Wah, didn't you?"

The thrust was unexpected, as Wallen had meant it to be. Marle, with an involuntary start, leaned sharply forward over the table; and then, with a clumsy attempt to cover his agitation, spoke viciously:

"Say, what the 'ell you givin' us? How should I know him?"

"You don't know him?" ejaculated Wallen in well-simulated surprise.

"Never heard of him," declared Marle; but the rat eyes were stealthily searching Wallen's face.

"That's strange," Wallen mused aloud perplexedly. "I'm quite sure I haven't made a mistake. The man was Upolo, of course, and pretty far gone, and talked thickly, but it was Ting Wah that sent me to you. He—" Wallen's fists in his pockets clenched a little harder—"said you would know."

"Did he?" inquired Marle with a sneer. "And who are you, mister?"

"I'm Wallen—Stacey Wallen, the first mate, you know," said Wallen earnestly. "I'm the sole survivor; left the bark in a boat and—what's wrong, Mr. Marle?"

The florid face, a miserable fear stamped upon it, and a grayish color, and the man, jaw-sagged, was staring across the table. A fierce joy swept Wallen—and then uneasiness. Perhaps, after all, his strategy had been faulty.

Drink-House Sam was evidently placing a far different interpretation on Ting Wah's dying message than he, Sprang Up From His Seat.

Wallen, had intended. And then, to Wallen's amazement, as abruptly as fear had come into the other's face it was gone, and in its place was sudden relief, genuine enough for all the shrewd, cunning gleam of the eyes that accompanied it.

"You say you are Wallen, eh, the first mate?" asked Marle craftily.

"Yes," said Wallen composedly.

"Then you're a liar!" Marle shouted instantly and sprang up from his seat.

There was an echoing creak of chairs as they were shoved back all over the room, the scuffle of heavy boots as men rose to their feet. Wallen, suddenly hard-faced, taken by surprise, hastily pushed his own chair back and stood up.

Marle was laughing brutally now, out in a strangely hysterical way, in which relief again was dominant. It puzzled Wallen—but there was little time to think of that. The men from the nearest table were pushing forward.

"What do you chaps say to that?" Marle bawled out, pointing toward Wallen. "This 'ere cove says he's Wallen, the first mate of the Upolo, the bark you've all read about as bein' picked up by the Phyllis!"

A chorus of derisive jeers, oaths and guffaws greeted the announcement.

Wallen's hand slipped into his coat pocket and closed over his automatic. They were crowding down the room, closing in around him now.

He glanced quickly over his shoulder to locate precisely the position of the rear door, should it come to a row—and instinctively stepped back a pace as a hulking, rawboned fellow, half drunk and carrying his liquor belligerently, lurched forward.

"Hit 'e says that, wot we says is that 'e's a bloody himpostor!" announced the man truculently. "An' wot's more, we doesn't like the looks of 'im when he comes in—does we, mates? An wot's more—tyke that!" He made a sudden, wicked pass at Wallen's face.

A yell of applause greeted the act. But the blow never reached its mark—Wallen had dealt too long and too intimately with the forecastle not to recognize the breed around him that was the forecastle's curse and the curse of the better men who honored it. With a quick, sure sidestep he evaded the blow, whipped his left in a lightning drive to the other's chin, and, as the man staggered backward into the crowd Wallen leaped for the rear door behind him.

He reached it, but not before they were upon him like a pack of wolves, snarling at him, tearing at him, their breaths in his face, pounding at him, trying to trip him up, to throw him to the floor.

The place was now in pandemonium. Again and again Wallen's clubbed revolver rose and fell, again and again his fist shot in and out and still he kept his feet; but he could not free himself long enough to get the door open—and then something seemed to lend him added passion, added strength.

'The face of Drink-House Sam! It was just out of reach—just out of reach.

He flung two men from him and lunged forward. If he could only mark that face! A bellow of fright from Marle greeted the savage onslaught—and Wallen's fist had smashed straight between the red little blinking eyes. The suddenness of the attack brought an instant's pause—and in that instant he had reached the door and this time wrenched it open.

And then Wallen laughed, not pleasantly, and his revolver, not clubbed now, swept the crowd.

"I'll be out here somewhere in the darkness," he told them grimly as he backed away, "and the first man that steps across the threshold I'll drop the way I'd drop a mad dog!"

They stared at him, dogged, sullen, but without a word—until they could no longer see him—and then they answered him with catcalls, hoots, profanity and brave defiance. But no man crossed the threshold.

He moved backward cautiously, making no sound, edging always in a sidewise direction—and suddenly, to his own surprise and relief, where he had expected to encounter a fence or some other obstruction, found instead that the rear of Drink-House Sam's gave evidently onto only vacant ground, for he had now come out onto what was either a street or a lane.

But while his escape was now assured, Wallen was in no happy frame of mind. He had yet to square accounts with Drink-House Sam. He had accomplished not only no part of the purpose for which he had come, but had, worse still, probably put the man thoroughly on his guard. But the night was still young and Drink-House Sam was still there!

He was not through with Drink-House Sam yet; the ill luck of his first attempt changed matters not at all; he would never be through with Drink-House Sam until—that murderous sweep of passion was on him again—until he had not only forced the secret out of the other but had paid the score between them as well! And this time he would see to it that the privacy of their interview was of his own making.

Wallen made a wide circuit of the place, which, owing to his ignorance of the neighborhood, in which he lost himself several times, consumed fully half an hour.

Abreast With the Times.

Mr. Parvenu-Smith was furnishing his library, which occupation was causing him considerable anxiety. In despair he called in an expert bookseller, and after making suggestions and a final order for a complete library he turned to his adviser and asked:

"And what is the name of that fellow who writes such a lot—Shakespeare, or something like that, isn't it?"

"Shakespeare, sir," answered the tradesman.

"Yes, that's it. Get me all he's written and make a note to order anything new he may write."

Concealing a smile the bookseller suggested: "And may I suggest you have them bound in morocco?"

"Bound in Morocco!" roared the newly-made Croesus. "No, certainly not. I want the confounded things at once."

TORTURED BY TERRIBLE ECZEMA

Suffered Three Years Until She Tried "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

DAME PETER LAMARRE

Pointe St. Pierre, P. Q.

"I think it my duty to tell you how much your medicine has done for me. I suffered for three years with terrible Eczema. I consulted several doctors and they did not do me any good.

Then, I used one box of 'Sootha-Salva' and two boxes of 'Fruit-a-tives' and my hands are now clear. The pain is gone and there has been no return. I think it is a marvellous cure because no other medicine did me any good and I tried all the remedies I ever heard of, without benefit until I used 'Sootha-Salva' and 'Fruit-a-tives.'

'Fruit-a-tives' cooled the blood and removed the cause of the disease, and 'Sootha-Salva' completed the cure."

Dame PETER LAMARRE (fils).

STORING CABBAGES.

Pull Roots and All, and Set Side by Side In Trench.

Heads of late cabbage may be cut and stored in central pits in the same manner as beets. Another common and very satisfactory method is to pull the plants, roots and all, and place them in a long pit with the heads down. A few heads may be removed from time to time without disturbing the remainder of the pit. As slight freezing does not injure the cabbage, the covering of the pit need not be as thick as for other vegetables.

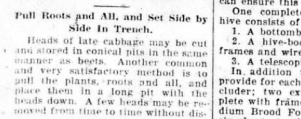

Fig. 1.—Cross Section of a Cabbage Storage Pen Made of Stakes and Poles and Covered With Straw—This Is a Good Way to Store Cabbage.

Another method of storing cabbage is illustrated in figure 2. The plants are pulled, roots and all, and set side by side with the roots down in a shallow trench, the length of which corresponds to the width of the bed. The bed may be any width up to 8 or 10 feet and as long as necessary to hold the number of cabbages to be stored. Cover the roots with earth. Around the bed erect a frame of rails, boards or poles, or by driving a row of stakes into the ground so that an enclosure about two feet in height is formed. Bank the outside of this frame with dirt and place poles across the top, covering them with straw, hay or corn fodder. Make provision for removing portions of the stored product from one end of the pit. This type of storage is inexpensive and gives good results. When the heads are cut, leave the roots in position, and in the spring there will soon be a fine crop of sprouts which will supply the family with an abundance of greens. A large percentage of the cabbage sprouts found on the market are produced in this way.

Heads of cabbage may be laid in rows on shelves in an outdoor storage cellar, but not in a storage room in the basement of a dwelling, as the odor is likely to penetrate through the house.

Creameries.

It has been claimed by some economic authorities that small creameries cannot compete with similar concerns on a larger scale located in urban centres. In the case of milk factories which cater to city trade only, and are situated near the centre of the source of distribution and collection, this statement is undoubtedly true, but the creameries along the concession lines will continue to thrive. In fact many of the latter plants are planning expansion, or sites for new ones are being purchased. As further evidence of the prosperity of the latter concerns, a considerable additional work in the line of the manufacture of ice cream will be undertaken by at least 10 per cent. of these factories. The importance of this production has been attached, solely confined to the larger concerns located in the cities. That the rural creameries will succeed in their new line of work may be taken for granted when one considers the overalls lessened overhead charges of these latter organizations. The saving in transportation charges will also be considerable. Under the present system of distribution the raw material produced on the farm is shipped many miles to the factory and returned to the country and village consumers in the form of frozen cream. Half of this expense at least, where the manufacturing is done at the local creamery, will be eliminated.

Straw Is Quite Valuable.

Straw is too valuable to be allowed to remain unused. Fresh oat straw, as well as wheat straw, can be used as a roughage in wintering stock. It is also advisable to use it liberally as bedding for farm animals as it adds to their comfort and absorbs the liquid part of the manure which is the most valuable portion.

Ashes Good as Fertilizer.

On account of the scarcity of coal there will probably be a large amount of wood used for fuel. Use all the waste timber, dead and dying trees for this purpose. Another aim is to conserve the ashes for garden fertilizer. They are rich in plant food, particularly potash.

STARTING BEEKEEPING

Suggested Outfit for the Apiary Novice.

Start With the Right Hive — The 10-Frame Langstroth Is Regarded as the Best—How to Prevent Swarming—Care of Freshening Cow.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

EXTRACTED honey production is the most satisfactory for beginners. Start with three colonies and sufficient up-to-date equipment and then make the bees pay their way. One colony does not give the beginner an opportunity to right mistakes or succeed satisfactorily. Three colonies can be managed by devoting one evening weekly to the apiary.

Avoid many troublesome pitfalls by starting with the right hive. The 10-frame Langstroth hive has given the best satisfaction in Ontario. All beekeepers' supply houses carry this hive and its parts in their regular stock. Buy your first hives from a good manufacturer. It is very necessary to have all hive parts interchangeable so that they may be used in any colony in the apiary. Uniformity and accurate workmanship alone can ensure this need.

One complete 10 fr. Langstroth hive consists of:

1. A bottomboard.
2. A hive-body with self spacing frames and wide rests.
3. A telescoping metal roof cover.

In addition the beginner should provide for each colony an extra shoulder; two extra hive-bodies complete with frames; and 7 lbs. of Medium Brood Foundation which runs six sheets to the pound, to fill the frames with a guide and foundation for the future combs. All hive material should be nailed, wired and painted before the opening of the spring rush.

It is advisable to commence with a 2-lb. package of bees and queen, a swarm or a nucleus. Less danger from disease attends the buying of pound packages than the buying of swarms and nuclei. Pound packages may be secured for delivery from May 1st to June 30th. Early packages will yield a surplus if carefully handled. Enquire of the Provincial Apiarist re disease in your locality before buying swarms, nuclei or colonies. A small colony of bees is much less vindictive than a full colony and thus offers a better opportunity for the beginner to grow with his bees.

The accessory equipment for the beginner should consist of:

1. A veil of black cotton tulle.
2. A standard bee smoker.
3. A hive tool.
4. A spur wheel wire embedder.
5. An uncapping knife.
6. An uncapping box.
7. A complete set of Department literature, Bulletins 213, 223 and 256, and a good reference bee book.
8. A small honey extractor.

With the exception of Nos. 6 and 8 it is advisable to acquire the material needed from a supply firm at once. The uncapping box can be made at home, and the beginner could probably co-operate with another beekeeper in securing the use of an extractor. With the increase of colonies to ten, it would then be advisable to provide a storage can to assist in handling the crop.—W. A. Weir, O. A. College, Guelph.

To Prevent Swarming of Bees...

June is the swarming month and time of supering for the main honey flow which begins between the 10th and the 20th of the month, depending on the season and the latitude. Be sure to give supers enough to avoid any crowding which may cause the bees to become discouraged, quit work and swarm excessively. It should be the beekeeper's aim to prevent swarming as much as possible. This is done by keeping young queens, giving plenty of room and a systematic examination of brood-chambers to detect colonies which are preparing to swarm. When queen cells are found far advanced they should all be destroyed and the queen herself removed. After the colony has been queenless one week the combs should again be examined and all cells, except one removed. This one will provide them with a queen and if only one is left they will not swarm again. Where an improvement of stock is desired the new queen may be given instead of leaving one queen cell.

Natural swarms should be hived on the old stand after removing the parent colony to one side. The swarms should be given the supers from the old colony. New swarms work with great vigor because they have no brood to care for during the first week. Colonies held together without swarming gather more honey than those which swarm. It is the beekeeper's patriotic duty to reduce the cost of honey production and thus increase the quantity he is called to produce as greatly as possible. They also cause the beekeeper less trouble at unexpected times. This may be done more by swarm prevention than in any other way. Bulletin 233 takes this matter up thoroughly and should be carefully studied by all beekeepers. By observing the methods described it is quite possible to manage as many apiaries as there are days in the week, barring Sundays and rainy days.—W. A. Weir, O. A. College, Guelph.

Care of the Freshening Cow.

This is the month when a large number of cows freshen. Both fresh cows and newly-born calves should receive special attention. Cows expected to freshen should be placed in a box stall for a few days before and after freshening. Many valuable cows and calves are lost by neglecting to provide box stall accommodation. This should be found in every dairy stable; or else have a special barn for the purpose.

Whistler's Concert.

Whistler's amusing personal conceit is illustrated in the following story: Meeting a friend entering a private view at the Grosvenor gallery, the artist took him up to a full-length portrait he was exhibiting of Lady Archibald Campbell. After the friend had expressed his appreciation of the beautiful work, he asked Whistler if there were any other pictures he would advise him to look at. "Other pictures?" said the artist in a tone of horror, "other pictures! There are no other pictures. You are through!"

COSTLY COAT IS IN GREAT FAVOR

Heavy Outer Garment Is Distinctive Article in Season's Wardrobe.

USE FUR, VELVET AND CLOTH

Favorite Materials Are Lovely as Well as Expensive—Cape Arrangements Prominent in Scheme of Evening Wraps.

Frocks are lovely this season but after a careful study of the season's modes one feels inclined to say that the coat is the distinctive article in the season's wardrobe—coats are so handsome, so varied, so altogether to be desired, and also in these most desirable forms so expensive, says a leading fashion writer.

One can buy a cheap coat, but unless pocketbook limitations positively enforce rigid economy, one is not likely to buy a cheap coat. Temptation to extravagance lurks on every hand. It is easy to be wise when folly does not wear alluring guise; but if a woman gets into a coat shop this season with more money in her pocket than she intends to spend, the chances are that she will invest in two.

Cloths, velvets, furs, all of the materials for the high class coats, are both lovely and costly. In addition, the modish coat is one of such ample fullness that it calls for much of the same costly material. There is no dodging high prices with that combination of expensive material and plenty of it.

Variety in Cost of Fur Coats.

The smart fur coat varies in price with the kind and quality of the fur, but even Hudson seal and caracul mount up if freely used and trimmed with other fur. These are two standard furs for the coat of more moderate price, and, while the seal, which as a matter of fact is dyed muskrat, is the softer and more becoming, caracul stands wear and weather more sturdily. The matter of becomingness is settled by the big collar of long-haired fur or contrasting short-haired fur that is likely to be used upon either the seal or the caracul.

Noted recently were remarkably smart-looking coats of caracul dyed in a taupe or tundra shade—and in about three-quarter length or even shorter. The collars were draped in loose folds or made, as one especially noted, in hoodlike shape at the back. These models were unquestionably intended for rather dressy wear.

But, to return to the subject of coats of exquisite cloths and velvets, so closely allied are the materials that in some instances one can scarcely tell whether it is the cloth or the fur that is the foundation material for the wrap. Especially is this true with regard to the coats of the more expensive type.

Smart Models Pictured.

One coat, handsomely trimmed with fur, was of velours in a beautiful dark brown tone with quantities of beaver trimming. The body of the coat was built upon straight lines but given the modish width at the hips by shaped pockets of the beaver, which extended from the waistline to the coat hem. There was a large collar and cuffs of the beaver. A youthful, small round hat and round muff of the beaver accompany the coat.

Another coat, of navy blue velours, rich in texture and with a wonderful bloom in its soft surface is trimmed with opossum, which gives the effect of chinchilla and is also tremendously effective in contrast with the soft dark blue velvety tones of the cloth.

The coat under discussion is made on the simplest of lines and has a large collar and large patch pockets and cuffs of the opossum. There is a narrow girdle of the material.

Velvet Wraps Are Lovely.

Velvet coats and capes of this season are really lovely, and upon them the designers have lavished their skill and inspiration as well as the handsomest of materials. There is a great variety of line displayed in these coats and because of the suppleness of the material it may be manufactured in a variety of ways. Such wraps invariably show a large fur collar and many ways of introducing fur trimming. Often the collar is so large that it covers the shoulders like an enormous fur cape. Again, there may be a velvet collar with wide fur band trimming. Another new and effective model of velvet had a large fur hood falling down over the back of the mantle. The lower part of the wrap was banded by the fur.

All Colors in Vogue.

All the dark velvets are used for afternoon coats. Black, of course, has first place because of its adaptability but very dark browns, the dark greens, grays, prune, dark blue, the castor tones, amber and sulphur yellows and various shades of reds appear in the display of afternoon coats. All of these, without exception, are fur trimmed—some in dark, long-haired fur like skunk or its cheaper relatives. But any and every effective type of pelt from sable to beaver is pressed into service.

Among the velvet coats much originality in sleeves, as well as in collars, is possible. The dropped shoulder is emphasized by lines of fur and the sleeve wrinkles softly from elbow to wrist. The collar may be of velvet and banded by fur.

Cape Arrangements Popular.

Cape arrangements are seen upon some of the chic velvet coats, as well as upon the more modish and refined into the scheme of beautiful evening coats. But the evening coat is another story. Afternoon cape coats having wide sleeves or just a wide encircling band of fur sewn into the sides of the garment are one of the smartest things this season.

A charmingly picturesque cape coat is of this type and made of blue velveteen. The deep yoke is trimmed with several bands of fur. The lower part of the wrap is attached to the shaped yoke with fullness. The arm slips through wide fur-trimmed bands at the sides.

Fur Used as Trimming.

An extremely smart coat and skirt costume is made of brown velours trimmed with dyed squirrel of a darker tone. The bodice of the coat is rather snugly fitted. Fullness is introduced at the hips and trimming consists of bands of the squirrel. The long shawl collar of fur fastens at the waistline with a large button.

Fur is introduced on frocks and suits in all manner of ways. In edging openings, as an inset in panels, and borders semi-fitted long-waisted bodices at the lower part and various other decorative uses are made of it.

Silk and Wool Embroidery.

Silk and wool embroidery is widely featured in the new street models of serge, gabardine and trieotine. Soutache braid also is called upon to assist in the decoration of this embroidery, which usually is carried out in a bold design that works up quickly and attractively.

Dairyman Not Soil Robber.

The dairy farmer not only studies how to feed his cow, but how to feed his land. He is not a soil robber, as he realizes that the farmer who reduces the fertility of his land robs, without reason, since he steals from himself.

Milking.

Persistency in milking. Although partly a breed and individual characteristic, may be considerably influenced by the length of the first milking period. Keep the heifer milking nearly the full year.

Fighting Parasites.

Of all farm animals sheep are the most subject to the attacks of parasites, so that every farmer should dip his sheep at least once a year, about a fortnight after being shorn.

Make Most of Implements.

The average farm implement is only about half worn out by use alone. The rest of the wear is due to rust and decay. Make the greatest possible profit out of machinery by using it continually for profitable work until it is worn out.

MUST CARE FOR COAT WRAPS

Fur as Well as Cloth Garments Are Called Upon for Both Long and Severe Wear.

There is scarcely any other garment in the galaxy of feminine apparel that suffers such demands upon it or is more adaptable to the months from October to April than the coat wrap. And now, as never before in the history of dress, is the all-fur wrap proving the deadly rival of the old coat of cloth. Perhaps one reason for the universal popularity of the fur coat—for once upon a time, and not so very long ago, either, only the woman with a fat pocketbook could afford to indulge her love for peltry with anything so luxurious as a whole coat of skins—is because now the cloth wrap costs almost as much. Unfortunately for the average woman, however, this is not a case of the fur coat becoming less expensive, but rather the one of cloth is hourly mounting in price.

Character and distinction are two of the attributes that the fashionable woman demands in her costumes, and this she achieves invariably when she dons the fur wrap, be it long or short.

The coater, by the way, is quite as much of a favorite this year as it was last, and when such a garment is developed in moleskin it leaves little to be desired in the way of chic.

Cleaning the Mechanical Milker.

Milking machine cleaning trouble sometimes lies in faulty placing of the rubber tubes and teat cups in the sterilizing solution. They should be so placed in the jar or crock that no air will be trapped in the tubes. The solution which is to prevent the growth of bacteria should touch all the inside wall of the milk tubes and connections, and for this a large crock is necessary — 20 gallons at least and better 30 gallons for three sets of, tubes. When letting the tubes down into the solution one should not lap or double them up, but hold them by one end, keeping them straight and letting them down into the solution slowly.

A way to make sure that all air is excluded is to remove the screw cap at the end of the claw, in cases where this cap is without an air opening, as this allows the sterilizing solution to reach the small passages and turns in the claw connections. Success in keeping the milking machine clean need not mean a lot of extra labour. At fair workers in rural engineering at the state college at Ithaca think that many farmers who complain about the bother of producing a satisfactory quality of milk by machines are spending more time than they need to properly clean them.

Colostrum Milk.

Colostrum milk should not be sent to creamery, cheesery, or condensery. This milk is especially intended for young calves. Any surplus should be fed to pigs. The ninth milking is as soon as the milk should be sold from a fresh cow. Much spring cheese and butter are spoiled by colostrum, or first milk after freshening.

Rearing of Chicks.

To be successful in the brooding and rearing of chicks requires constant care and attention to details. If chicks are hatched by hens, let the hen remain quietly on the nest until the chicks get so lively that they insist on leaving it, then remove the hen with her brood to a coop previously prepared for her. All coops should be thoroughly disinfected before use each season and also between broods.

Plough Wheat Stubble Deep.

As soon after harvest as possible all wheat stubble should be ploughed deep. This buries the weed seeds which are in the stubble and most of them are destroyed. The small, delicate flies cannot crawl to the surface when they are buried under more than five or six inches of compact and pulverized soil. The plough should therefore be followed with a harrow, drag or disk.

A sad occurrence was reported from Sheffield township, last week when Michael Carroll, a respected resident and a farmer, was found drowned in Stinson's Lake on Monday. Last Friday he left the house with the remark that he was going to fix a fence in the rear of the farm and did not return, and on Monday his body was found in the lake. He was fifty-seven years of age and a bachelor. Four brothers and two sisters of the deceased reside on the homestead. Coroner Dr. Cowan was called, but deemed an inquest unnecessary.

At all times the subject of poisonous plants is naturally one of very great importance in our agricultural country. It is more so at the present time, when the world-wide cry for food has turned thoughts and intentions of farmers and stock owners to the necessity of greater production. In this greater effort there is the danger of pasturage being restricted and over stocked, and animals forced to eat plants they would otherwise avoid. In order that the owner of live stock may have a knowledge of poisonous plants and be able to distinguish the most harmful species in his neighborhood Experimental Farm Bulletin No. 39, Second Series, "Principal Poisonous plants of Canada", has been prepared by Miss Faith Fyles, B. A., and is sent free upon application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. This is of interest to the general public and to students of botany. It suggests that for general treatment of animals a supply of permanganate of potash and alum should be kept on hand and a well dissolved equal portion of each should be administered to the animal at the earliest possible moment after poisoning.

HAT MYSTERY

The maiden paused beside the stream.
Her face was like a summer dream,
Then o'er its mirrored waters bent,
Gazed in its depths with look intent.
Some mystic spell, like chrystal gazing,
Is o'er on the maid; her hands are raising
Above the head; her fingers move,
T'is sure some mystic sign of love;
I'll break the spell before to late,
I'll speak, and learn the maiden's fate.
What vision comes before thy eyes?
Myself, she said, in mild surprise;
I turned away, she said, please wait
Till I can get this hat on straight.
